

Making a Will

Making a Will is essential. It offers peace of mind to all concerned. The alternative is to leave behind a state of confusion, anxiety and additional expense. A Will ensures that what you leave is distributed according to your wishes so that only those you wish to benefit can do so. Keeping your Will up-to-date is equally important.

Kreston Reeves Will writing service

Our solicitors will make the whole process of drafting your Will as straightforward as is possible given your circumstances and we will continue to support you afterwards. Remember that your Will is an individual, personal document that we will tailor to suit your particular needs. With Kreston Reeves' background in law, tax and finance we have unrivalled expertise which can make a real difference.

What should a Will include?

The basic rule is to ensure everything you own is passed on, but Wills can cover far more than just gifts of assets. Funeral instructions are useful and the naming of guardians for your children is critical if any are still under 18.

Gifts of jewellery, paintings and heirlooms are commonly included, as are legacies of money and gifts to charity. Trusts will need to be set up for children or grandchildren if they are still young and trustees appointed to hold their inheritance until you decide when it should be transferred to them.

An interest in a business, farm or company must be dealt with carefully and in a tax-efficient way and the appointment of special business executors might be sensible.

Wills can also create foundations, set up new charities, give directions for the future care of animals as well as save considerable amounts of Inheritance Tax if drafted properly.

Trusts in Wills

Sometimes using a trust in a Will is vital. Some popular reasons for including one are:

- To save Inheritance Tax
- To provide for under-age beneficiaries
- To stop your wishes from being changed after you have died
- To protect your assets if a beneficiary may need long term care
- To maintain maximum flexibility over the distribution of your estate
- To protect and provide for a disabled or vulnerable beneficiary
- To protect a loved one's right to live in your house whilst you leave it to others
- To safeguard assets for a beneficiary getting divorced, or at risk of bankruptcy, or financial insecurity.

Executors and Trustees

These are the people who have the legal responsibility to wind up your estate after you have died. Ideally, these should be business-minded relatives or friends. Kreston Reeves has a specialist Executor and Trustee service to guide people through the legal and tax implications which arise when dealing with a deceased person's affairs. We can take full legal responsibility for administering an estate, help you to obtain the Grant of Probate quickly and efficiently or act in an advisory capacity only. More information about our services can be obtained from our Probate Advice Line on 01403 253282.

Unintended consequences

If you do not make a Will, all or part of your estate may go to relatives that you never intended to benefit or, as the law does not recognise couples who are not married or in civil partnerships, your partner in life may receive nothing.

Storage

All our clients' Wills are registered on a database and stored free of charge.
